ABSTRACT

This paper is about to find the significance of microfinance in Pakistan. The developing economies have short of funds but the microfinance play a vital role in these types of economies. Microfinance helps in alleviation of poverty. Through microfinance people can start their small businesses and through this they will be able to meet their daily needs and they can also expend their business cycle as well.

Microfinance both in rural and urban areas helps the people and the network of microfinance spread all over Pakistan. Some new organization also entering in this field and the government also forcing these institutions that they spread their networks all over Pakistan that through microfinance they will be able to manage their needs by their own self and they will not be dependent on the government. So through this the burden upon the country will be reduce and this will results in the productivity of the country and also increase the economic value of the country.
