ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This work would not have been possible without the continuous guidance of many people to whom I am deeply thankful. First, I would like to thank my supervisor Mam Nida Kamal to trust on me, continuous assistant and support towards my research. Your support lead to the completion of the research. My heartfelt thanks to my teacher Ali Raza Nemati to assist in the process. His guidance and knowledge about certain areas helped me a lot in this research process. He doesn't just only teach but also encouraged and helped me throughout the semester. And in the end sincere gratitude to Bahria University Islamabad to provide me opportunity to learn many things from this institute. Also, I'm thankful to all my classmates who were with me in this 2-year journey. Finally, my family whom I am very grateful. To my mother who sacrifices many things just to enable me where I'm standing now. To my father who always been very supportive. May Allah reward every one of you and bless you people.

DEDICATION

Dedication to my family who support me in this journey of education. Their continuous encourage and trust enable me to achieve at this position. Dedication goes to all those teachers who were in the journey of my whole educational career. They taught me confidence, self-realization and much more.

ABSTRACT

This study empirically tests the relationship between employee voice and employee job satisfaction considering the moderating role of perceived organizational support among the employees of banking industry of Pakistan typically including top five banks, Habib Bank Limited, Allied Bank Limited, United Bank Limited, National Bank of Pakistan and Muslim Commercial Bank. The thought of employee voice has picked up noticeable quality over the most recent two decades with analysts from alternate points of view examining the subject. All around, this exploration has discovered that practicing voice in the workplace is identified with positive states of mind towards job satisfaction as well as organization. Using the survey data (n=155) i found evidence to find the hypothesized relationship between employee voice and job satisfaction and moderating role of perceived organizational support. Results showed that employee voice positively impacts the job satisfaction and also perceived organizational support positively moderates the relationship.
