ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

First and foremost, I would like to thank my father who made me believe I could do, and excel at whatever I wanted and my mother who constantly pushed me to work harder and finish my research on time. I would also like to express my gratitude to my advisor, Ms. Zehra Rehman for helping me throughout my research. This thesis would not have been possible without her constant encouragement and guidance. I am grateful to my brothers for being part of, mostly, one-sided conversations about theories, genocide and peacekeeping and to my sister-in-law who endured unwanted lectures on war crimes and atrocities.

I would also like to thank my friends for their constant support, for always having a smile on their faces while I regaled them with gruesome stories from genocides across the world and for cheering me on every time I finished writing a page of my research.

I am grateful to all the people who supported me in writing this thesis; this research would have been much harder without them.
